If there is only a mains plug then it is an additional handset and just needs registering with your existing base station, you have got one yes. If there is only a mains plug then it is an additional handset and just needs registering with your existing base station, you have got one yes. Yes NBG, I have a handset that slots into its base but the base is number 3 of 3 I dont have base 1 or 2 as my mum has those. I plug the mains lead into the mains and the phone line into my phone socket but when I phone from my mobile to my landline, nothing I have checked the ring volume and that is fine NBG, do you know how I can register my base station if I only have base 3 of 3 Or is it as the others say, it cant be done. Much appreciated. Only my main base can be plugged in the phone line. The other two dont have the lead to plug into the phone line just lead to plug into mains. A trip to Argos might be in store. Worth a try though I guess. Thanks allbeer Yes NBG, I have a handset that slots into its base but the base is number 3 of 3 I dont have base 1 or 2 as my mum has those. The additional handsets communicate with the base station which allows it all to work. They dont usually have a phone socket.
